

Fuel efficient tanker design

Abstract

The presentation covers applied formal Hydrodynamic hull optimization for tankers. Typical design procedures focus on the contract condition, however, often 50% of the sailing time tankers sail in ballast, thus a multi-objective optimization helps to reduce the overall fuel consumption. In addition asymmetric stern lines help to improve the inflow to the propeller and thus allow further to improve the energy efficiency.

Karsten Hochkirch, DNV GL SE, Germany